Are you passionate about promoting nutrition-based research?

As a next step to their national 8th place ranking in research productivity, the students and faculty in the Department of Food Science and Human Nutrition aspire to accomplish even greater things by way of stemming the tide of nutrition-related health problems.

To do this, laboratory renovations within Gifford Building are critically necessary. Updated labs may increase the potential for grants and sponsorships to further advance nutrition studies and research productivity.

With your support, the crowded labs and spaces - where students learn and groundbreaking discoveries are made - can be updated to today's research standards. Imagine the possibilities.

Currently two labs are ready for donors to share in this remarkable journey of science and discovery.
